(De L'Académie Européenne des Sciences, des Arts et Lettres, Paris)

Good evening Scientists, Artists and written word-Lovers!

Good evening Friends!
I am honored to be with You.
Now and here.

In the very heart of the civilized world.
In Paris.

Be a member of such Institution means to Exist. To Be.

To be a Verse in the most beautiful song.
To be a Friend to the friends of the Muses.
To be a portion of the Paris sky above the Avenue
des Champs-Élysées.

To be a fraction of the Glory Beam residing under the Triumphant Arch of the Star.

To be a stone in the sett paving Montmartre or the River Seine bank.

To be a Furbelow of the skirt of a Parisian lady,
from whom Mona Lisa has stolen her Smile.

To be a Tear of all Tears imbedded in this Mont
Blanc of culture.

To be Paris.

I hope that My Humble Self will touch Your hovering Rainbow, by the Touch of gratitude, commitment and devotion, as well as contribute to preserving everything that you embedded in this Life called the European Academy of Sciences, Arts and Literature.
